Editor:

It's time to set the record straight on Carmel's sitting-on-the-grass case.

We seem to have forgotten how the hippies were tearing up the park three years ago. The City, in a compromise, prohibited everyone from sitting on the grass. There was no mention of hippies in the law; it applied to everyone. It was very effective in cutting down abuse of the park.

When the ordinance was passed, we stated that undesirable and unsanitary hippies were destroying the park. It was this candid statement of facts that upset some people and caused the court challenge.

We didn't think much of that challenge. Neither did the Municipal Court in Monterey, the Superior Court in Salinas nor the Appeals Court in San Francisco. They all said the law was reasonable.

Unfortunately, the California Supreme Court in a 4 to 3 decision decided that the law was discriminatory.

We agree with the dissent of the three Justices, that "the unfortunate result of this rash holding is to invalidate, in its entirety, comprehensive and urgently needed legislation aimed at preserving one of California's most attractive communities." In addition, the decision severely limits the power of cities to regulate destructive conduct.

For those reasons, among others, we feel the case should be considered by the U.S. Supreme Court. That Court, however, only accepts 10 percent to 15 percent of the cases presented to it.

Editor, Carmel Pine Cone:

Lt. Calley was not alone on trial. The American people were on trial, and all doubts about our guilt or innocence have been erased.

At the Nuremberg and Tokyo trials we, along with three other powers, clearly established that certain acts were war crimes and that not only individuals but organizations responsible should be prosecuted.

In Vietnam our forces have equalled and surpassed many of the crimes for which we executed Germans and Japanese. Considering our mass bombing and artillery assaults on civilians, our genocidal defoliation and search and destroy missions, and a general practice of torturing prisoners or turning them over to our allies for death by torture, then we are being less than realistic if we think Calley's crimes were isolated incidents.

By Nuremberg standards our C.I.A., many air force and field commanders, our Sec. of Defense, our President and their immediate predecessors would have been on trial along with Calley. In addition, the trial would have been conducted by an international tribunal, not by the same agency that committed the crimes.

In World War II we condemned the German people for allowing Hitler to commit atrocities, and now suddenly we find we are no different. We don't even attempt to plead ignorance of the facts.

With our overwhelming emotional support of Lt. Calley we have made it very clear that we condone rather than condemn his action at My Lai, and thus we have delivered our own coup de grace to an image of an America that was once respected throughout much of the world.

Dear Mr. Editor:

In reference to the Calley case, there are certain points which should be cleared up before final judgments are made.

Calley's record as a civilian from his youth up was not such as to lead any sensible person to believe that he should be given a Commission in the U.S. Army and allowed to be responsible for the lives of the men he was to command, or that he had the mental capacity to exercise sound judgment under stress.

Any investigation of his formative years would have shown that he was a chronic school dropout, lacking in self-discipline and without education. Yet, notwithstanding this record, he was commissioned by the Army although totally inept for the job. This showed up in combat when he acted exactly as he could have been expected to act from his previous record.

You can't punish a man if you place him in a critical position and give him a job totally beyond his capacity to perform. You might just as well give him a job as a Professor in College and then blame him for failure to teach properly. The public hue and cry that he really did what others in similar situations would have done is a wicked libel against the thousands of fine officers and men who, because of a basic sense of right and wrong would not and did not act as he did.

The fault lies with those responsible for giving him a commission and one can only hope that before this horrible tragedy is repeated, all unqualified officers will be relieved of duty and returned to civilian life where the principle damage they can do is to themselves.

As for Calley, he should be set free, discharged from the Army and let live with his conscience but don't let us make a hero out of him.

Very truly yours,

Dear Editor:

I have just received a copy of the Pine Cone from a friend who was visiting in Carmel. I had recommended Carmel as a must on their motor trip. They were delighted, but like myself, sorry to learn that high density apartments are being considered in the Carmel area.

Citizens! Citizens! Surely you must realize the beauty of your green rolling hills, your beaches, your countryside. This is priceless! Citizens why aren't you on your toes fighting to preserve your beautiful Carmel by the Sea?

From a friendly Canadian who has enjoyed holidaying in your beautiful Carmel by the Sea.

Sincerely,

SOME OF Carmel's Little Old Ladies are of the male persuasion. A white-haired gentleman was walking a small female dog on a leash. When the dog paused to accomplish what dogs are supposed to accomplish while being walked, the Little Old Gentleman discreetly turned his back until the small dog, straining at the leash, signaled that it was time to continue the walk.

A CARMEL MAN'S reaction to the recent sentence meted out to Lt. William Calley, "...at hard labor," was to ask rhetorically, "Why demean labor by making it a punishment?"

AROUND-THE-WORLD travelers from Carmel sent a glorious-colored postcard showing Puerto Del Solter, Mallorca, with the heart-melting blues and greens of the bay and encircling trees. The message on the back: "Wouldn't you almost think you were in Carmel from this picture. Ma is quite beautiful when not spoiled by too many new buildings and hotels."

WHO IS KINDER than Carmel people? Just nobody. Mr. M.L. Baker came to our office a few days ago, spry as a chipmunk, and eager to share his good fortune with "anybody else in town who is handicapped with a bum hip, as I was." Told us he used to hobble about on a cane, then demonstrated almost a ballet kick to show the contrast. "Had an operation in the city, a special British plastic job," he said. "Tell people to call me at 624-8416."

On Tuesday, April 9, Carmel holds its city elections. Important issues are involved.

There are four men running for city council.

1. Charlie Childers, incumbent, for the two year term. As no one else filed to run for the two year term, his election is assured.
2. Donald Craig, for the four year term.
3. Fred Godwin, incumbent, for the four year term.
4. P.A. McCreery, incumbent, for the four year term.

OLAF encouraged by pledges of support

The Odello Land Acquisition Fund committee (OLAF) met Monday afternoon to discuss plans for a public fund-raising campaign to purchase the Odello Ranch.

Attorney Fred Farr, who heads the group, said he was encouraged by the continuing stream of pledges that OLAF is receiving from individuals. He said he is continuing to contact foundations and conservation groups that might contribute money to purchase the land, and is also exploring various avenues of possible federal support.

Farr also said he hopes to meet with landowners and developers to discuss possible alternatives for the use of presently undeveloped property.

Citizen's Committee seeks creation of 'greenbelt' district

A citizens' committee backed by the Sierra Club, Nature Conservancy and the Audubon Society took the first legal step Monday to have a large section of the Monterey Peninsula incorporated as a Regional Park and Open Space District.

Attorney Sean Flavin filed the application for incorporation with the Local Agency Formation Committee (LAFCO) in Salinas. LAFCO will hold a public hearing on the proposal on Tuesday, April 27.

Flavin said the purpose of the district would be to acquire land and hold it as an open space or greenbelt area. This could be done by purchasing the land, receiving it as a gift or, in some cases, through condemnation.

The proposed district would have the same boundaries as the Monterey Peninsula College school district. It is a combination of three smaller school districts—the Carmel Unified School District, the Monterey Unified School District and the Pacific Grove Unified School District. Roughly speaking, this takes in an area extending from Marina to Anderson Landing south of Big Sur, and up Carmel Valley as far east as Jamesburg.

Flavin said the proposed district would be financed by a maximum 10 cent property tax. He said the tax base within the boundaries is approximately $275,000,000, which would generate $275,000 a year if this were approved. This would mean a cost of $10 a year for a $40,000 home.

The idea to form a Regional Park District is an outgrowth of a public hearing held by the Sierra Club a few months ago to focus public attention on the need to acquire undeveloped land for greenbelt areas. The proposal has no direct connection with efforts to purchase the Odello Ranch.

Provisions for such a district are spelled out in the Regional Park District law, which was amended in 1970 to include provisions for acquiring open space lands.

The one regional park district now in existence is in the East Bay. Flavin said efforts are now underway to include portions of San Mateo and Santa Clara counties in a similar district.

If LAFCO approves the boundaries for the Monterey Peninsula district, Flavin said the next step would be for the citizens' group to get the signatures of 5,000 registered voters on a petition urging formation of the district.

Next the district would have to be approved by the County Board of Supervisors, and finally it would have to be voted into existence at a general election. Flavin said he is hopeful that the proposal can be presented to voters next November.

If established, the district would be run by an elected board of five or seven directors. There would be an administrative director and a very small staff.

Flavin emphasized that the district would not be managing land as such or operating a park system in competition with the county. Its purpose would be simply to acquire land for open space and to set priorities for the purchase of land with the tax money collected.

If it became necessary to develop some of the land for recreational use, Flavin said the district would then transfer the land to the county to operate as a park.

"I don't think any of this is a panacea," Flavin said, "but it should help save some land."

RED CROSS DRIVE

"We are nearing our goal", reported Graham Adams, chairman for the Red Cross 1971 campaign for members and funds, "and we will continue until it is attained."

$25,349 has been raised toward the $35,775 figure. Many residential workers are making calls back to try to find people at home. Carvel Baldwin, chairman for the residential district urges anyone missed by the solicitor to mail his check to the chapter.

It's not a 'moratorium', but

Four-month delay on Odello rezoning cheers development opponents

BY PAT GRIFFITH

Before taking up consideration of the Odello ranch development last week, Planning Commission chairman Edward Marcucci held up a plump artichoke and read the note which accompanied it: "A rose is a rose is a rose."

By the time the epic hearing was over, almost four hours later, opponents of the $60 million development were chortling that a moratorium by any other name sounds just as sweet.

Their smiles came after the Planning Commission voted unanimously to continue consideration of the Odello ranch rezoning and related density issues to July 28.

The four-month delay, one of the longest ever called by the Planning Commission, was emphatically not intended in any way as a "moratorium" on development per se. Commissioners agreed the time was needed to give the planning staff an opportunity to study complex questions of flooding and flood plain zoning, and also for the developers to submit a detailed subdivision map.

But the practical effect is that backers of OLAF (the Odello Land Acquisition Fund) headed by attorney Fred Farr have four months in which to raise funds to purchase the 292-acre ranch for a park or open space area without fear that it will be rezoned in the interim. And while this is not the six months' moratorium recommended by the Lower Valley Advisory Board, the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association and several other groups, it is much more than many conservationists, in private, had dared hope for.

For brothers Bruno and Emilio Odello, president Don Whiteman of the City Reconstruction Company and others connected with the development, the long delay came as an unexpected blow.

"This is the worst decision I've seen the Planning Commission make in the 10 years I've been coming here," explained Carl Hooper of George Bestor and Associates, engineers for the project. "They sat up there and told us how much they liked the general idea of the plans, and then they turned right around and gave the opponents just what they wanted."

The Odello brothers were obviously frustrated and angered by the decision. They had opened the hearing by noting that for five years it has been general knowledge in the community that their artichoke ranch was in financial difficulty. Any delay in rezoning, they had warned, might cause CRC to withdraw.

Whiteman, too, protested the lengthy continuance. Earlier in the evening he had set forth a proposal asking for prompt approval of rezoning "without undue delays or moratoriums." In return, CRC would wait 30 days to see if the community could raise the first $250,000 needed to purchase the property.

If this condition were met, Whiteman had continued, then CRC would wait another 90 days to see if the acquisition fund reached $1 million. If that point were reached, Whiteman had said that he would wait still further to see if the deal could be closed.

"As long as these conditions are met, we agree not to file for a use permit," he had said. "We are willing to have our interests purchased at cost, and with no profit included."

As the hearing concluded, he reminded the commissioners of these conditions and said CRC might have to reconsider its involvement in view of the delay on rezoning.

As of Monday, there was indication that CRC would pull out of the project at this stage.

LONG, HOT HEARING

The hearing in the Board of Supervisors chambers began at 8:55 p.m., almost an hour and a half past the scheduled time. The planning commission, which had been in session since 9 a.m., was running late, and didn't recess for dinner until almost 8 p.m.

The stuffy room was packed, as more than 300 persons, including several children, crowded the aisles, sat on the floor and patiently stood four and five rows deep across the back. The air conditioning was not turned on, and as the long evening wore on, one woman fainted. Still others, standing in the corridor outside the room, gradually drifted away when it became obvious they would not be able to hear the proceedings.

At least half the crowd present wore green-lettered lapel badges reading "I am FOR the ODELLOS."

Both sides presented a series of witnesses in an attempt to avoid repetition and to keep discussion focused on pertinent issues.

Most persons in the audience as well as the commissioners were already familiar with the basic development proposal for 944 residential units and 900-resort-motel units. So Calvin Platt, making the presentation for architects Sasaki Walker of San Francisco, concentrated on answering objections raised at earlier hearings held in Carmel and Carmel Valley.

Anticipating that opponents would stress potential flood problems, Platt said that the lagoons planned for the center of the property would provide extra storage capacity during periods of heavy rainfall.

He noted that the lagoons would be four feet lower than the residential areas, with greenways inbetween, so that "therefore there is great capability of holding water for short periods of time."

Platt also countered arguments against the proposed density of 6.3 units per acre by saying it would be identical to the density now found in Carmel.

Basically, Platt said, the community is faced with three choices: buying the land for public use; allowing development under existing zoning, which could result in 60-foot lots along the highway and a solid mass of one-acre parcels on the rest of the land; or acceptance of a major planned development.

FISH SPEAKS

Platt was followed to the microphone by rancher Stuyvesant Fish, who said he wanted to make it very clear that he was not there to plead the case for more developments in Carmel Valley.

"I've argued and fought against development on many cases," he commented, "although admittedly and sadly to no avail."

Fish said that while it is his "fervent hope" that OLAF will be able to purchase the property he feels that the planning commission has an obligation to honor the provisions of the Three Ranches Plan and allow the Odellos to develop their property.

"The Odellos have relied upon and put their trust in a contractual agreement made five years ago," Fish said. "This was considered, until the present, to be a bona fide contract."

If the Three Ranches Plan is now scrapped, Fish said, it would be comparable to the Indian treaties that were agreed to by the government and then deliberately broken in years past.

"If this course is pursued, a Pandora's box will be opened," he warned. "I hope and we all hope that there will not be a polarization here, but realism ... and if this land is to be bought, please let it be done with equity, honor and good faith."

His comments were greeted with applause from all sections of the room.

Arthur Oppenheimer, trustee of the 19,900-acre San Carlos Ranch, came from San Francisco to speak up for the Odellos, and said that if the Three Ranches Plan is shelved, Rancho San Carlos may be the next large holding to be developed.

"The citizens of the Carmel Valley should be grateful for the open space they have thus far enjoyed," Oppenheimer said in a prepared statement. "The large land owners should be applauded for keeping their holdings intact thus far. They have subsidized the Carmel Valley residents by paying for services that they do not receive. Our taxes for schools, sewers, streets, police and firemen probably run more than the total taxes paid by most in attendance at these public meetings, and these are services we do not enjoy."

"How much longer can we continue to pay our high tax load and leave our lands undeveloped? We would like to think it will be many years, but conditions can change ..."

"If the citizens of the Carmel Valley can have the Three Ranches Plan destroyed, then our plans for the future are in jeopardy and Rancho San Carlos will have to reconsider its future development immediately."

Also speaking on behalf of the Odello development were Pat O'Malley and Miss Fields, who said the plan

"neither immoral nor a threat to the public welfare," and Russell Giles, who estimated the development would produce over $1 million in taxes while not costing the county anything for sidewalks, lighting, street maintenance, care of the lagoon and parkways or for welfare payments. Giles said that because the development would be occupied by middle aged or older people, there would probably not be more than 200 to 300 children, resulting in a "negligible" burden to the Carmel school district compared to the impact of a "regular subdivision."

LETTERS SPLIT

Before opponents rose to present their case, zoning administrator Robert Slimmon reviewed the letters received by the commission from official governmental agencies. Overall, he said, the commission had received 89 letters in favor of the development and 95 that were opposed.

Among the letters Slimmon read was one from William Penn Mott, Jr., director of State Parks, who opposed the requested rezoning because of potential harm to the wildlife sanctuary by the beach.

Farr led the opposition speakers, first showing slides of the Odello property to set the visual stage for what was to follow.

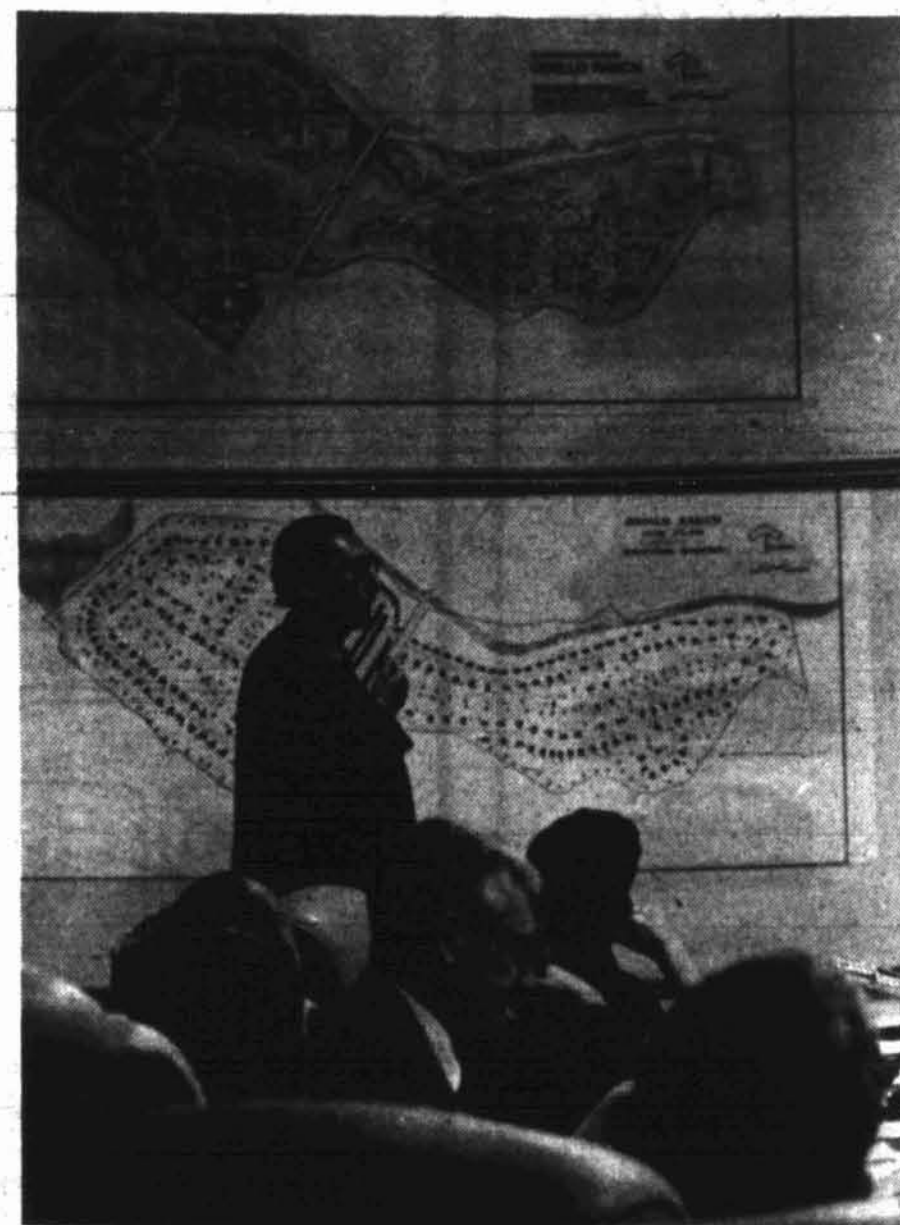

Carmel mayor Barney Laiolo read the resolution passed by the Carmel City Council in opposition to the development, and stressed a point that was to become a major theme of the opponents - that the Odello plan "invites disaster from flooding and pollution."

Mrs. W.E. Bleick, president of the Monterey County League of Women Voters, read a statement which also stressed questions of flood plain development and flood control as the reasons for the LWV's opposition to any rezoning.

Earl Moser of the Sierra Club read letters from Robert Brattain, chairman of the technical advisory committee to

"A ROSE IS a rose is a rose" quoted Dr. Edward Marcucci as he held up an artichoke that had been left for him at last week's Planning Commission hearing on the Odello development. A member of the Odello family in the audience, glimpsing the brownish outer leaves on the artichoke, gasped in half-jest "That certainly can't be one of OURS!"

TWO MAMMOTH MAPS of the Odello property confronted planning commissioners at the hearing. At top is the general site plan for the 1,844 unit residential-tourist development proposed by City Reconstruction Company of Los Angeles. Below it is a map prepared by the developers showing how the property could be developed under existing one-acre zoning, with higher density strips along Highway 1. Calvin Platt of Sasaki Walker Associates, the San Francisco architects for the project, describes the difference.

photos by George T. C. Smith

GREAT PATIENCE AND GOODWILL was demonstrated by a crowd of over 300 persons jammed into the Board of Supervisors' chambers for the Odello hearing. Some came at 6 p.m. to be assured of a seat, then had a three-hour wait before the hearing started.

the State Air Resources Board, and Professor George Haltiner, chairman of the Department of Meteorology at the Naval Postgraduate School, which warned of present and future smog problems.

Haltiner's letter said that Carmel Valley is frequently covered by a heat inversion layer, which, along with the mountains on either side, helps to trap pollutants in the Valley.

The real "clinger," from the opposition's point of view, was the testimony offered by Col. Herman Schull, former Army District Engineer for the State of Florida and former manager of the Florida Inland Navigation District.

Schull said that Carmel Valley is subject to flash floods, and that the Carmel River is presently unregulated by reservoirs or dikes. He compared the flood channel proposed for the Odello development, which would be designed to handle 25,000 cubic feet of water per second, with the recommendation of the last Army Corps of Engineers study that any improvements should allow for a rate of 40,000 cubic feet per second.

"Building on the flood plain of a river is an invitation to disaster," Schull testified. "I'm somewhat horrified that it might be done. I think flood control should be built into a comprehensive plan ... piecemeal plans should not be approved. It's possible that part of the Odello lands are needed for overflow."

William Davis of Hatton Fields, who spoke next, also raised the subject of flood plain zoning, and asked: "Who's going to bail these people out? We know it's going to be Mr. Taxpayer. The river has to have room to expand ..."

Also reading a statement was Mrs. Philip Gibson of the Carmel Area Coalition, who told the commission that the CAC represented 711 persons opposed to any increase in density for the Odello property.

"In an area of such beauty and national importance, only an acre of low density makes sense," Mrs. Gibson said. "There is nothing questionable about low density zoning for proper purposes."

PROPERTY OWNERS OPPOSED

Several other groups also were represented in opposition to the plan, including the Audubon Society, the Rancho Rio Vista property owners, Carmel Highlands Property Owners, CVPOA, Carmel Knolls Property Owners, Carmel Views Property Owners, the Carmel Citizens Committee and, of course, OLAF itself.

Just as the public hearing was about to end, attorney Tom Hudson, sans horse, strode forward to defend the Three Ranches Plan once again. He said that he had tried to raise funds to purchase the Odello ranch for public use for over a year and a half without any success, and implied that he doubted that Farr would have any better luck.

Hudson also told the commission that "moratoriums are not part of the planning process."

It was after midnight before the commissioners themselves finally had a chance to speak.

Commissioner Keith Evans of Carmel praised Whiteman's willingness to delay development as a "generous offer", and said that if money is not raised within that time period, "I think Odello has a right to develop at a reasonable density."

He added that while the proposed density "may be too high," he basically felt that the plan was a good one.

"I think we could go a lot farther and do a lot worse," he commented.

Evans also raised the possibility that the Odellos could, if they wished, sell off the property in five or 10 acre parcels "that would go like hotcakes."

Evans said it is not in the community's interest "to run a good developer out."

"I think the people in Carmel Valley accept floods as a calculated risk," he continued. "I don't think there is going to be any acceptance of flood plain zoning."

Evans also emphasized that he thinks the Odellos should receive full market value for their property, and that rezoning should not be delayed in order to hold down the possible purchase price for OLAF.

Commissioner Leon Stutzman also expressed concern about density and flooding problems, and said he felt time was needed to get answers to several questions that had been raised.

While saying he agreed with Evans on the need to set "reasonable density," commissioner Vaughn Parsons said density should be set in relation to the areas around the ranch. If it is to be decreased, he said, it should be in order "to make it a better development, not simply for appeasement."

"I would firmly oppose any effort of the planning commission to coerce the Odellos into a waiting period," Parsons added.

However, after planning director Ed De Mars listed several problems of density and design that the staff felt needed further study, the way was cleared for the final motion to continue everything until July 28.

A subcommittee composed of Stutzman, Evans and Marcucci is to work with the planning commission staff and the developers to work out details before then.

CHOICE SEATING IN THE AISLES was all that was available for many persons attending the Odello hearing, which began an hour and a half late and lasted until 12:45 a.m. Sharing the center aisle here are Gunnar Norberg, William Davis and Mrs. Philip Gibson.

While shopping Italy for antiques last fall Luciano found a most unusual estate being sold near Venice. In this lovely villa he found antique furniture and beautifully painted credenzas and armoires. Luciano is shown unpacking a Chinese vase from this estate. This rare shipment from Italy is now on display at Luciano Antiques, San Carlos & 5th, Carmel.

Kids blend nature, photography

A blending of educational disciplines plus some good fresh air were among the goals of Sharon Miller's fifth grade River School class when they took a walk recently, cameras in hand. From the photographs, emphasizing nature subjects, the kids distilled ideas for Haikus. The purpose of the activities, along with the creative results, are displayed here.

By SHARON MILLER

Have you ever taken a leisurely walk with a child? Often he will notice things we never see—a wiggling worm, the shape of a sand dune, or a bee on a flower.

With this in mind, our class planned a photographic-nature hike. The basic goal of the trip was to provide motivation and material for a creative writing project, but it also encompassed the areas of science, ecology and art. Each child brought his own camera to photograph the scenes he found unique and interesting.

We started out for the beach, armed with our cameras. We walked slowly, stopping often to look at and discuss what we saw—a bumblebee on a daisy, "seat trees" (bonsai), gulls by the water, a seal, footprints on the sand, among other things. The children looked at things very closely, because they had to be selective about the things they were to photograph. Each child had the pictures he took developed. From these the children selected 30 to be enlarged.

Several parents accompanied us on our trip. Roger Fremier taught the children how to use their cameras most effectively. Mr. and Mrs. Bob Steinmetz, Mrs. Polly Scanlon, Mrs.

Ruth Harper, Mrs. Ann Gray and Mrs. Bea Porter also assisted on the excursion.

The culmination of the project was a creative writing lesson. The children selected pictures and wrote Haiku describing them. They were excited and interested in writing about pictures they themselves had taken.

The pictures generated many lively and interesting discussions—waves, tides, tidepool animals. Looking closely at the environment in which they live, seemed to help the children realize the need for conservation from a positive standpoint—preserving the beauty of the world.

The exciting aspects of the trip were the enthusiasm of the children for the project, and their increased awareness of and sensitivity to their environment.

Further projects utilizing the photographs will be water color impressions and stories written about the pictures. The children plan to invite their parents to see the pictures and their work.

This photographic nature hike is one of many examples of the increased emphasis placed on interdisciplinary relationships, particularly in humanities and sciences, at the school.

The science activities in this class reflect the overall Carmel Unified School District science goals kindergarten through 12th grades, which include development of scientific attitudes, rational thinking processes, manipulative and communication skills and acquisition of knowledge.

In the goal area of scientific attitudes, students in the class spontaneously share concepts learned and being explored by their fellow students under the guise of individual projects.

Our classroom projects range from the trajectory of a baseball to growing microscopic animals in lagoon water. The projects also encompass a mode to develop the rational thinking processes, which underlie scientific modes of inquiry. The photographic nature hike served as another example of manipulating materials and equipment and in gathering, organizing and communicating scientific info.

Of equal importance, the class textbook serves as a basic resource containing knowledge of nature that gives us command of her potential. In addition to the textbook, students at the school also have a library that offers over 10,000 titles and other community resources essential in the acquisition of scientific knowledge.

Contractor, aerospace families new Carmel motel owners

A pair of Southern California couples are new motel operators in town.

Raymond F. Fastenow, an aerospace professional, and his wife, Bonnie, from Woodland Hills, near Los Angeles, became owners of the Rosita Motel on Torres and Fourth last month.

This is the Fastenows first experience as motel owners. They bought from long-time Carmel residents, Robert and Fay Martin.

"I love the work, meeting the people and putting them in their rooms," says Mrs. Fastenow.

Harold and Gwen Bankson will take over the San Antonio House on June 1 from Charles and Susan Aucutt. Mr. Aucutt is managing vice president of Valley National Bank in Pacific Grove.

The Banksons are from Bakersfield where Mr. Bankson was a general contractor for 20 years. He still retains his license but doesn't know yet whether he'll continue to practice the profession.

The Banksons are "tickled pink" to move from the Bakersfield heat to the more temperate climate of the Peninsula.

Another advantage of moving here is they will be close to their Navy lieutenant son, Rodney, and his wife, Patti, for the first time in 15 years.

Rod, who pilots an A6 Intruder, a carrier-based, all-weather attack plane, is working toward his B.A. degree in political science at the Naval Postgraduate School.

He'll be at the school another year and a half and plans to retire in five years.

"Our family has lived throughout the whole realm of the United States and we're really impressed with Carmel, California," says Rod.

The Bankson's daughter, Elaine, also recently came to the area to swell the reunion.

While the Banksons are newcomers to the area, the Fastenows have been visiting Carmel annually for the past 12 years.

"We just love it here," says Mrs. Fastenow. "We always came here celebrating our anniversary. This time we came to stay." The Fastenows were married in Carmel 12 years ago.

"We're finding out that a lot of people were married here," says Mrs. Fastenow.

Special Easter floral display at Brinton's

One of the most remarkable floral displays ever seen in the Monterey area, designed and installed by Olive and Norman Skadan of Carmel Rancho Florists, was unveiled this morning by Brinton's Carmel Rancho Shopping Center.

This was created, said Richard Brinton, as a reverent tribute to Easter and the Holy Week.

Particularly impressive was the center fountain cascading water over the three Graces into a pool bordered by fern and African Violets. Huge clusters of Rhododendron and magnificent specimens of azaleas and cymbidium orchids abound. Easter lilies, chrysanthemum, daisies surround still pools in which float gardenias. Greek columns provide a general theme of a superb garden.

The display will remain through Easter and everyone can enjoy an unusual spectacle. There is no charge.

Weary Planners continue Val Verde and Hacienda issues

Although the lengthy Odello hearing all but engulfed the planning commission's agenda last week, three other matters of interest to Carmel Valley should not go unnoticed.

Arbor Development Co. was scheduled to present its plans for a 45-unit subdivision on Val Verde Drive before the planning commission Wednesday night in an application for a use permit and design approval.

But after looking at the overflow crowd on hand for the Odello hearing, and seeing how late the proceedings were running, attorney George Walker asked the commission to continue the Val Verde hearing to a later date.

The commission gladly agreed to the continuance, and tabled the matter until May 26.

The Riverwood development, also up for design approval, had also been listed on the planning commission's agenda for early in the evening. But it wasn't until almost 1 a.m. that the weary commissioners had a chance to look over the drawings for the 150 two-story townhouses. No one was in a mood for further argument, and the design approval was granted at 1:05 a.m.

One of many issues which had caused the evening session to start so late was a lengthy and sometimes angry hearing over a request by Hacienda Carmel for ST (special treatment) zoning.

Attorney Myron Etienne presented the case for the 300 Hacienda residents, who face a peculiar legal problem, because the Hacienda is no longer a State-licensed rest home.

When Hacienda Carmel was built in 1962, it received a use permit under the provisions of the "G" zone, which allows State-licensed rest homes among various possible uses. In 1966, the retirement community decided not to renew its license because of new regulations established by the State which it felt were unacceptable. By losing its license, it also lost its legal status under the county zoning ordinance.

Therefore, Etienne said, ST zoning with a density of 7.5 units per acre would give the property legal zoning stature once again.

The issue became somewhat confused when a resident of Hacienda Carmel, George Hattie, read a letter from the State Department of Public Health which said the Hacienda's license for its infirmary had been renewed.

Richard Baumhoff, president of the Hacienda Carmel Association, later told the Outlook that the infirmary license, which had been allowed to lapse for almost a year, was something totally separate from rest home licenses which are approved by the State Department of Social Welfare. The State social Welfare license is the one that was dropped in 1966, Baumhoff said, and that is the one which will not be renewed because the Hacienda is not now and does not plan to be a rest home.

At last week's hearing, strong opposition to the rezoning came from the Carmel Area Coalition, which pointed out that approval of the high density rezoning could set a precedent for other developments in Carmel Valley.

Realtor Nancy Strathmeyer also objected, noting that ST zoning would have the additional side effect of legalizing a commercial real estate office on residential property. Hacienda Carmel has continued to operate its tract real estate office since 1962, despite strong objections from the Carmel Board of Realtors, which feels this is an improper use of residential property under zoning laws.

After more than an hour of debate, commissioner Keith Evans moved for approval of the rezoning, but the motion was defeated five to three. Chairman Edward Marcucci and Darrell Bengard of King City voted with Evans.

The matter was then continued to April 28.

Unexpected street water no cause for alarm

The streams of water rushing down Carmel streets in the early morning hours this week are the result of the California American Water Company's regular spring flushing of fire hydrants and water mains.

There should be no cause for alarm, the company stressed.

Citizens out on the streets in the southeastern part of town early this week had been anxious that the water was coming from a breached sewage system or broken water mains. Some simply expressed curiosity about the source of the water.

The water sheeted over the streets in some places and filled storm drains. A small lagoon was formed in the beach at the termination of Thirteenth, where water was channeled down the stone stairway.

The annual flushing removes rust and other deposits from the system and "improves the water," Wayne Millington, Cal-Am division engineer said Tuesday.

By opening the hydrants, the water velocity is increased with the effect of coring out the mains, he explained.

A crew covers three or four blocks a night. They work from midnight to about 6:30 or 7 a.m.

The crews have already flushed the mains in Pacific Grove, New Monterey and Monterey.

The Carmel flushing will probably be completed this week, said Millington.

Authentic Luau to be held at Fairgrounds

Saturday, May 20th, is the date set for the most unique social event of the year — an authentic Luau complete with underground roast pig and lovely Polynesian entertainment, followed by dancing in a beautiful island setting designed to please the most discriminating party-goer.

Staged in the Monterey County Fairgrounds exhibit building, this event, sponsored by the active one-year-old Women's Auxiliary of the Monterey Peninsula Council on Alcoholism, promises to be outstanding.

Beneficiaries of the event's proceeds will be the Alcoholism Council whose purpose is education on alcoholism — not for or against drinking — and the month old Alano Club, 575 Calle Principal, Monterey, a social club for those recovered from the alcoholic disease and others interested in the nation's No. 1 health problem.

Organizing this unusual affair is routine for general chairman, Mrs. Alan "Ty" Gillis of Carmel Valley, a native of Hawaii and fourth generation descendant of the Afong family. She has spearheaded successful luaus in Florida and New Mexico for up to 1,000 people.

With her background of experience, Ty is planning for 500 persons and has secured the professional services of the internationally known Walter Napoleon Family of Hawaii and Oakland to prepare the Hawaiian delicacies. They will arrive several days in advance to ready roasting pits and make other necessary arrangements.

Included on the fantastically exciting menu is Puaa Kalua (underground whole roast pig), Maia (baked bananas), Moa and Laiki (chicken and long grain rice), Hala Kahiki (sweet pineapple), Lomi Lomi (salmon), Poi, and Haupia (coconut pudding).

The party begins with Mai Tais at 6:30 p.m. with dinner for everyone planned at eight o'clock. Guests preferring cocktails other than Mai-Tais may order no-host cocktails. Tickets for the Mai-Tai hour, dinner, entertainment, and dancing are $20.00.

The public is cordially invited to attend and may obtain tickets by calling Mrs. Richard Sippel, ticket chairman, 624-1788, or Mrs. Virginia Frohman, Auxiliary President, at 373-4169 or write P.O. Box 1302, Carmel.

Alliance concert to benefit

French language scholarship

A luncheon and concert at the estate of Mrs. Mary Lee Shepard in Atherton on April 18 will benefit the French language scholarship fund of the Alliance Francaise of the Monterey Peninsula.

Following the 1 p.m. buffet which Mrs. Shepard will provide, Mrs. Marilyn Davis Liddicoat, mezzo soprano, will offer a program of French songs. Mrs. Camille Oleta will accompany her at the piano.

Mrs. Jehanne Carlson, president of the local Alliance, arranged the benefit, with the entire $5 donation going to the scholarship fund. Those wishing to attend are advised to bring checks immediately to Mrs. Carlson, P.O. Box 3573, Carmel. She will return a map giving directions.

Bach Festival programs, soloists are announced

The 1971 Carmel Bach Festival's brochures and ticket order forms were mailed last week to people all over the country who have attended the Festival programs and are awaiting details concerning the concerts in July.

On July 16, Music Director Sander Salgo will conduct the opening concert of the 34th Festival which promises to bring fresh laurels to the long established and widely respected summer music series.

From the opening program on the 16th through Sunday afternoon, July 25, the eyes of the music world and the ears of capacity audiences will be concentrating on what takes place musically in Carmel's Sunset Theatre, the Carmel Mission Basilica, and during the intimate morning and afternoon recitals.

Three free lectures and a symposium will also add to the ten days of memorable experiences for discerning music lovers.

The Festival brochure announces that noted soloists, vocal and instrumental will join the Festival Orchestra Chorus and Chorus in performances of unusual interest and variety all under Salgo's direction.

Prominent among returning soloists who have proved to be favorites in the past are: pianist Istvan Nadas; Donald Peck, flute; Jascha Silberstein, cello; Walter Trampler, viola; Raymond Dute, oboe and oboe d'amore; Edward Haug, trumpet; Ralph La Canna, trumpet; Darlene Lawrence, harpsichord; Ralph Linsley, harpsichord; Shirley Love, mezzo-soprano; Mary-Esther Nicola, soprano; Margot Power, soprano; James Schwabacher, tenor; Douglas Lawrence, baritone; Kenneth Ahrens, organ; and Rosemary Waller, violin.

This impressive roster of familiar names will be enhanced by the addition of Evelyn Mandac, soprano; Jerold Siena, tenor; Marvin Hayes, bass; Christiane Edinger, violin; Karen Phillips, viola and Henri Dorigny and Ako Ito, classic guitarists.

Maestro Salgo will conduct two Sunday afternoon performances of The Passion According to St. John (in German) by J.S. Bach on July 18 and 25, and has programmed other Bach works including the Christmas Oratorio, Part I (a Festival first), the Wedding and Coffee Cantatas, the Concerto for Violin in A minor and the Brandenburg Concerto No. 6.

The mid-Festival concert in the Carmel Mission Basilica will feature music of Antonio Vivaldi. A stage presentation of "Venus and Adonis" by the 17th Century composer John Blow which was composed as "A masque for the entertainment of the King" will be offered as part of the program on both Saturday nights.

Mail orders for tickets are now being accepted by the Festival office. Tickets will be available at the Box Office beginning June 1st. For information or the requesting of brochures call 624-1521 or visit the Carmel Bach Festival Office in Room 11 in the Sunset Cultural Center, San Carlos and Ninth in Carmel.

'Plaza Suite' big success for Bill Asp

"Plaza Suite", which opened to large and very appreciative audiences at the Studio Theatre in Carmel last weekend, emerges as superb comedy. Directed and staged by Bill Asp, it must be recognized as a thoroughly professional production.

A Neil Simon comedy, which nowadays speaks for itself, it is sure-fire entertainment with dialog and situations which are both original and hilarious, and completely realistic if not entirely real.

"Plaza Suite" consists of three unrelated, except that they all take place in Suite 719 at New York's famed Plaza Hotel.

And also that each is a "slice of life" vignette, closely related to our present kind of society - with its brittle strands that don't always hold together.

Robert Heater and Gertrude Chappell are featured in each of the three situations, two as husband and wife, and are very much at home with the sophisticated dialog which has lofted Neil Simon to Broadway's theatrical heights.

Yet it is the intelligent and perceptive direction of Bill Asp which translates the unique kind of comedy created by a Neil Simon into a fully enjoyable evening of local theatre.

The first act tells the familiar story of a husband and wife married for many years but with declining respect and attachment. They cannot even agree on the day or date of their anniversary. And they agree to disagree on everything else. An affair with his secretary, played commendably by Marilyn Rose, comes to have greater meaning than 24 (or is it 23?) years of marriage.

In the second act, it is a notorious Hollywood producer who seduces his high school sweetheart, now 20-odd years later a New Jersey housewife with a dull husband and three children. Each seeks in the other what their own lives now lack, and what each wants and gets is a new sexual experience.

The cleverest playlet must be the final one. An expensive wedding awaits a young bride who locks herself in the bathroom of her parent's Plaza suite, and rejects all entreaties and threats to emerge. Miss Rose is the bride, and after all else has failed, the bridegroom, played by Richard Raines, is summoned in desperation, speaks three "in" words, and she emerges demure and fluttering, completely shattering her distraught parents.

"Plaza Suite" will entertain audiences at the Studio each weekend - Friday, Saturday and Sunday - this month and next. Professionally staged as it is, it shouldn't be missed. GMD

CABLE service is now available in Carmel Valley - up to, and including the Farm Center area.

James T. Root, Jr., is presently visiting his parents, Bette and Jimmy Root of Carmel, since his recent graduation from the University of California at Hayward. Shortly after that event he received his Army Reserve commission from U.C., Berkeley. Jim is on brief leave before reporting for active duty as a second lieutenant at Fort Benning, Ga.

Quipped his father, who is a retired colonel from the regular Army, "Why did they hold your ROTC graduation on the tenth floor of the building?"

"Because," explained Jim, Jr., "nobody can lob a Molotov cocktail that high."

ALLEN IS TRUSTEE

Howard E. (Bud) Allen, La Playa Hotel owner, is one of two new trustees for Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. Also elected was Robert McKeever, Monterey banker. Both will serve three-year terms.

Dr. A. Carol McKenny of Pebble Beach was re-elected president of the Hospital's Board of Trustees. Re-elected to other offices were Arthur C. Stewart, vice president; Robert O. McMahan, secretary; and Cyril Chappellet, treasurer. All are from Pebble Beach.

At the recent annual meeting, Dr. McKenny reported that 1,000 babies were born at the hospital the past year, 6,000 bed patients and 28,000 outpatients were cared for.

The president's report also noted that the $4 million South pavilion was completed, with interior decorations on the original structure due to be completed by Labor Day. Largely through community gifts, the hospital has expanded from 100 beds to 174, with service departments expanded to accommodate a 300-bed facility planned for 1985.

Dr. McKenny also announced that the Hospital Auxiliary had volunteered some 45,000 hours of service last year, and has pledged $64,000 for a nuclear camera with a wide range of uses in diagnosis and treatment.

Another part of the president's annual report was the generosity of the late W. Selby McCreery, San Benito County rancher who bequeathed half of his Tres Pinos ranch, valued at $2 million, to the hospital, earmarked for the preservation of excellence in patient care.

FOOTBALL, ANYONE?

A group of Carmel people is seeking recruits for their Sunday afternoon touch football games, usually played at 2 p.m. on the beach of the 13th Avenue cove.

Not students, as might be assumed, but young couples whose school-age children sometimes join a team!

Among the players looking for more team mates are Ron Faia, the Roger Premiers—and his parents, the Walter Premiers!—the Roger Larsons, the David Smiths, the Mervin Suttons, and the Lynn Troskys. There are others, but these are the "regulars."

PLEA

You, Man, known as The Developer,
 Turn away your eyes, please from these fields —
 These virgin lands that lie at river's mouth
 Where river meets the sea,
 Where fog lies soft and gray, and sea gulls rest
 From winging after prey.
 These gentle fields have never known the bite
 Of builder's stakes, nor felt the penetration
 Of a concrete block. Nor borne a shingle roof.
 Only the hoof
 Of deer, so far, have left their imprint on the river's edge.
 Let it be so.
 Go, Man, go. Go elsewhere to develop.
 Better yet, improve some ugly scar already made,
 Where orchard used to flourish, say, and now an eyesore stands.
 Go use your talents, hammers, drills,
 Your bricks and mortar and your skills
 To beautify what Man has once destroyed.
 But leave these virgin lands as they have been Since Time began ...

Unsullied by the hand of Man.

The Carmel Valley Chamber of Commerce has decided to spend $150 to put a bench in the Carmel Rancho Shopping Center to be used primarily by elderly shoppers waiting for a bus ride back to their retirement homes.

The Chamber also approved an allocation of $50 to the Village Committee for beautification, and a letter writing campaign aimed at cleaning up an unsightly gas station in the Village.

William Sours of Carmel is the new owner of the Carmel Valley Raquet Club. The club was built by Peter Paxton of Malibu in 1968 and had been operated by him until last month.

Sours, a former Navy officer, recently retired after 10 years with Lockheed Corp. He moved to this area from San Jose.

Paxton, who heads Tennis Club Consultants, Inc., the world's largest developer of tennis clubs, still holds a five-year contract on the operation of the summer tennis camp. He will be here this summer to direct that program.

Supervisor Willard Branson said Monday he has changed his mind and will vote on the Odello Ranch development proposal after all.

Sunset views:

Have a nice day on Ocean Avenue Easter Sunday

BY FRANK H. RILEY, SUNSET CENTER MANAGER

Sunday — Easter, as you know — Ocean Avenue is to be closed to vehicular traffic. This will take a few parking places out of use, but we remind you that the two lots at Sunset Center are available for parking. We hope that you will "feel free", as they say — especially, since there is no charge.

In fact, you can earn a little bonus. For, as you leave or pick up your car (between 1 and 5 p.m.), you can stop in at Studio 1 to see the Brett Weston photo exhibit; and then, just across the patio, visit Room 8 to see the Easter Parade of High School Art. The latter consists of some 30 to 40 pictures in various media created by members of various art classes at Carmel High School. You will be interested in several unusual techniques and will enjoy the over-all good quality of the work.

As you stroll back to Ocean Avenue to take your own part in the Carmel Easter Parade, you will discover some music appropriate to the day and to the al fresco atmosphere, perhaps a few artists and photographers at work and it's even possible that an Easter Bunny may put in an appearance.

MAIN THING, though, is to get out and be neighborly — not so much a big deal as a nice, friendly joyful afternoon to amble around without noise, competition, or pollution from cars.

May we assure a lot — Have a nice day — happy Easter.

'Sunday in the Park' theme of Pops Concert at Fair Grounds

The seventh annual "Pops" concert of the Monterey County Symphony Orchestra will be presented under conductor Haymo Taeuber, April 25 at the Monterey County Fair Grounds at 2 p.m.

Sponsored by the Monterey County Symphony Guild, this concert is planned for the entire family, the theme being "Sunday in the Park."

Gates will open at noon to allow time for a picnic before the concert, and food may be purchased at the fair grounds.

On hand for the children will be Snoopy, the dog; the Lion; Raggedy Ann and Raggedy Andy; a puppet show; the lady with a thousand pockets (with surprises in each one); the organ grinder with his monkey and a clown passing out balloons to the children.

Mrs. George S. Lockwood, Jr. is chairman of the event this year. Serving with her are Mrs. Lee Darragh, Mrs. Thomas A. Kenan, Mrs. Robert Gay, Mrs. Kenneth McNaughton, Mrs. Avery Tompkins, Mrs. John Julian, Mrs. Harry Lusignan, Mrs. Robert Kelly, Mrs. Malcolm Stratton, Mrs. Edwin Bliss, Mrs. Christopher Spaulding and Miss Anne Barrows.

Admission is $1.50 for adults; 50 cents for enlisted men and students six to 16 years of age. Children under six will be admitted free.

Tender, loving care through the years for Mora statue

FATHER SERRA is kept in fresh paint and memories by friends (left to right) Vincent and Paula Rogers, Byington Ford and Marjory Lloyd. The Rogers plan to repaint the statue, which is again spattered with paint thrown by vandals. Ford was in charge of Del Monte Properties real estate when the company's Carmel Woods subdivision—site of the statue—was opened. Miss Lloyd noted the unveiling in an old Pine Cone news story.

The statue of Father Junipero Serra at the circle intersection in Carmel Woods dates back to the opening of the subdivision.

Standing at the intersection of Camino Del Monte, Alta, Dolores and Serra, the life-size oak sculpture was commissioned by Del Monte Properties, the area's developer.

The sculptor was Jo Mora, the renowned Carmel and Pebble Beach artist who came to the Peninsula in 1920 to create the Serra Sarcophagus at San Carlos Mission.

According to Mora's son, also called Jo, who is now in retirement at Pebble Beach, the Woods' sculpture was patterned after the figure on the Serra Sarcophagus.

"He designed everything, even the benches", says Mora of his father.

The statue was originally one of the stations of the cross, a halting point for the old Serra pageants between Carmel and Monterey.

The statue has been painted many times since its erection. For a number of years the job was undertaken by the noted Father Serra authority, Harry Downie of Carmel.

The repainting usually follows incidents of vandalism. The most recent case was Halloween two years ago when paint was splashed on the statue.

Vincent and Paula Rogers of Carmel offered to relieve Downie of the chore this time. Mrs. Rogers, an artist, used acrylic paint to keep a fresh appearance longer. Rogers, who works at Carmel Builders Supply, says he held the ladder.

"We like to keep it up," says Rogers. "It's a beautiful thing."

The Rogers tried for a while to have a light installed at the statue but were unable to generate city interest in providing a power line.

Martha Burde, wife of the Carmel architect, Walter Burde, has also contributed to the upkeep of the statue for a number of years. She spent numerous hours caring for the flowers and shrubs around the statue and also pair of the redwood benches when they were occasionally damaged by a careless driver. Recently she was able to convince the county, road department to keep an eye on the plot.

The Burdes live a couple houses up from the statue.

The statue was unveiled in July 1922 by Father Raymond Mestres of Carmel Mission, according to a Pine Cone story dug up by Marjory Lloyd of Del Monte Realty.

A parade of Carmelites was organized from the soldiers' monument on Ocean to the Woods in intersection on the day of the unveiling, recalls Byington Ford, real estate manager for Del Monte at the time. George Sterling, the poet, who happened to be in town, composed a poem for the occasion which was read by Valentine Mott Porter.

The poem named Father Serra "warden of our wood," says Ford.

HARRY DOWNIE, who probably knows more about Father Serra than any living man, relaxes during a morning constitutional on one of the redwood benches at the memorial.

The conscience of Carmel:

Help! It's Carmel Calling!

BY GUNNAR NORBERG

Exclusively Yours... 'A Listening Ear'

—for whatever of interest or concern to you!

By appointment 624-0202

Have you visited Carmel? For a day or a week? For a month or a year? Do you plan to come back? Or hope to? Did it seem to you a place apart—in a world harassed by an indiscriminate and rote-inspired "progress"? A place where speed-driven man could—in a setting of unparalleled scenic beauty and salubrious climate—pause, sit still, begin to recover a meaning for his living?

Many, now here, have followed a pattern these questions suggest, and they have tried to retain and to enhance the intangible values implied, and to maintain the wondrous natural setting they found, both for themselves and for posterity.

Today the dedicated Carmelites who live here, find their treasured haven gravely threatened by a monster sixty-million-dollar development, proposed by a Los Angeles-based firm, City Reconstruction Company, which, in turn, is backed by one of the great giants of modern industry, the Prudential Life Insurance Company.

Do you remember the Carmel River? And the State Highway bridge which crosses it, just south of Carmel, with the green-growing artichoke fields to the left and the right, just past that bridge?

That's just where that sixty-million-dollar development is proposed, including both a 600-room and a 300-room hotel, and homes, just landward of a state-owned beach and a bird sanctuary. On a little less than 300 acres—with a good deal of it flood-plain land! All of it what the City of Carmel has long considered a needed "open space" or "green belt" area, though one outside its city limits. Acres which, in farm use, fitted well into the City's master-planned concept, as well as into a Carmel Valley plan.

The artichoke fields, farmed for many years by a single family, the Odellos, have been subject in recent years, to rising land assessment, and to consequent increasing property taxes—tax increases significantly higher than those occurring on artichoke land in other, more distant parts of the county. (The County Assessor has already placed a "market value" figure of some $900,000 on the less-than-300-acre Odello Ranch, and this figure, it is said, will be "subject to review" by the end of this coming June.)

However, it isn't this $900,000 figure which is being mentioned as the likely price of the Odello land, but one about four times that amount. Why, you ask, is there this very substantial difference in the assumed value of the land?

Because that Los Angeles firm, City Reconstruction, is said to have arranged a purchase agreement which would eventually convey to the Odello family that three million dollar plus amount for their farm land. But the City Reconstruction development plan would require a change in the existing zoning which applies to the Odello holdings. And the request for that rezoning came before the County Planning Commission last week. When the public hearing on the request ended—long after midnight—the County Commission postponed action on the request until July 28th. Meanwhile, a Commission committee is to give "detailed study" to the City Reconstruction proposal. Meanwhile, also, the many citizen and homeowner organizations which strongly opposed the proposal, along with both the City Council and the Planning Commission of the City of Carmel, have been given a four month interval to try to find funds which could make possible the purchase, for park use, of the Odello ranch.

Even City Reconstruction Company volunteered that it would be willing to convey the Odello farmland to a public agency, for public use—but only after the requested "special treatment" rezoning would first have been granted by county authorities. Such rezoning would, of course, have the effect of increasing the market value of the Odello land. (The County Assessor presently has a $3,500-per-acre market value on most of the Odello property, while an amount of some $11,000-per-acre or more, is being mentioned as one the City Reconstruction Company contemplates.)

With this one million to three million plus price tag on the Odello artichoke fields, even the most dedicated Carmelites—a few of them rich, more of them poor, and most of them in-between—are likely to find it enormously difficult—particularly in a relatively brief period of time—to find the required sums to buy the Odello property, either directly, or from City Reconstruction, if it should get the rezoning it now seeks, before a public purchase arrangement could be arranged. (While County Planning Commissioners seemed to feel, at the prolonged initial hearing last week, that 944 home type units along with 900 transient-type units would be too many, there was no indication that they intended eventually to refuse to the sixty million dollar development the kind of rezoning it essentially envisioned.)

Just what you interrupt, are those of us who live at a distance—asked to do? We have no vote. We cannot influence the Monterey County Board of Supervisors, who will have final say on any rezoning. We could make a monetary contribution, of course, but would that be likely to make much difference? And if we wanted to, where should we send a contribution?

Deeply concerned citizen and homeowner groups who oppose the mammoth sixty million dollar Odello Ranch development have found an effective voice and instrument for the expression of their views in the newly formed Carmel Area Coalition, whose pleas last week led to postponement until July 28th of any further consideration of City Reconstruction Company's huge housing-and-hotel subdivision. (The Coalition's mailing address—if you wish to communicate with it—is P.O. Box 21, Carmel.)

Sponsors of the Carmel Area Coalition include such widely known figures as former U.S. Ambassador Fulton Freeman, photographer and conservationist Ansel Adams, retired California State Supreme Court Chief Justice Phil S. Gibson, architect Nathaniel Owings, and former California State Senator and federal highway beautification coordinator Fred Farr.

It is Senator Farr, by the way, who heads a just-formed affiliate of the Carmel Area Coalition, which has been named the Odello Land Acquisition Fund (OLAF), and which is making ready to accept, and to seek pledges to support its coming effort to prepare the way for public purchase of the Odello property whenever such a purchase may become possible.

So, if you feel fondly about Carmel and if you wish to see it survive into the future, you can make a monetary contribution to the Carmel Area Coalition to help it in its campaign to stop huge developments, such as the City Reconstruction one, from destroying the zoning barriers.

Today Carmel needs help, not only right here, but also from as far as you, the reader, may be, when you read this! (Copyright 1971 Gunnar Norberg)

If you're an average PG&E home customer, you're paying 18% less per kilowatt hour for electricity than in 1958.

It's a fact. Even with the recent rate increase, the average PG&E home customer pays 18% less per kilowatt hour for electricity than he did 13 years ago. The reasons: several earlier rate decreases and zone adjustments, plus like other things, electricity is "cheaper by the dozen."

Sure, your average bill is probably higher today than it was in 1958. But that's because you've added more electrical conveniences and comforts to your home. Yet isn't it nice to know that it's still possible to enjoy these 1971 conveniences at less than 1958 rates.

Of course, during recent months your bill was at the winter peak, for you used more heat, more light and cooked more hot meals. But with warmer weather and longer days just around the corner, you'll need less electricity and your bill will drop.

CARMEL CLOSEUP: Phil Goff

'God grows everywhere, but Carmel is more conducive to that growth'

By JUDITH A. EMNER

Can a successful sales executive with an expense account find happiness cooking vegetable soup in Carmel-by-the-Sea?

If his name is Phil Goff, the answer is yes and the soup is the greatest.

Aside from his immaculate white chef's apron, Goff looks like a lean, olive-complexioned professor of aesthetics. His face sports a curly, silver beard which matches the curly silver-grey locks that are just long enough, but not too long.

Goff was born in Michigan and moved to Los Angeles when he was 12 years old. He lived there for the next 25 years, and considers his escape "time off for good behavior."

He was indeed a successful sales executive for a major international business machines corporation. For years, he played the corporate-image game of three-button suits, attache cases, expense accounts.

Restructuring his life—some would call it "dropping out"—just happened. With his new-found philosophy, Phil merely accepts it as having been the right thing for him at that time.

"I really had no control," he says, "even though we humans suffer the delusion of thinking we control our actions."

"What brings about any inner spiritual awakening?" he asks rhetorically. Then, musingly, he answers his question: "When you realize nothing that you can ever experience for the rest of your life—through your senses, through your intellect—can ever be enough. At that point of inner awakening, I had to change everything in my life."

"I came to Carmel. God grows everywhere, but this environment is more conducive to that growth."

Phil's awakening led him to vegetarianism.

"I used to be a heavy meat eater. As an executive with an expense account, I used to charge the best steak or lobster on the menu five or six nights a week."

His reasons for becoming a vegetarian are essentially religious.

"When you realize that the creative life force dwells right here in your own body and realize that you can consciously know that God-spirit and that temple within which it grows, you make every effort to clean up the temple. Not eating meat is one small part of this cleansing," he explains.

"I am not for or against vegetarianism," he adds. "In the end it is irrelevant. As Gandhi said, there are peaceful meat-eaters and violent vegetarians."

What does meat-eating have to do with self-cleansing?

"Everything in this physical world is vibration," begins Phil. "If you eat animal products, you will have animal vibrations."

"You know, the Bible says, 'Thou shalt not kill.' Who ever said that pertained to man alone? Thou shalt not kill any living thing."

"There is a life-force in plants, too, but a lesser force. And since man can't yet live on air alone, he must eat something. Plants are the least objectionable. The Law of Karma, translated into Western understanding puts it as 'as you sow, so shall ye reap.' Every cause has a similar effect."

Goff has, of course, been tremendously influenced in his new life by Eastern religion and philosophy. In this, he is not alone, for more and more young people are finding meaningful ways of life guided by these ancient Eastern teachings.

Vegetarianism, to Phil and others, is a step toward "cleansing the temple" of the body and changing one's levels of consciousness.

"Many youth today are becoming aware that these higher levels of consciousness are attainable," he continues. "Their new awareness has manifested itself in society's awareness of the environment, of the poisons we are being fed and forced to breathe."

"You know, Krishna in the Bagavad-Gita promised he would return to earth when bad manifested itself; he said he would come back to make things good again. I think that's what's happening with the youth today."

Phil had been visiting Carmel for many years before he moved here. His transition from Establishment acceptability to his new happiness was abrupt.

"If you're going to change your life style, you just walk out of everything that's been binding you," he says.

His hobby for many years had been gourmet cookery, so natural cooking seemed a logical new beginning.

"I gave away a $75 bottle of Lafite Rothschild wine when I stopped drinking," he says with no regret.

"I had to start revising my meat recipes to vegetarianism. Then, from simple vegetarianism, I got interested in nutrition and natural foods.

"I don't like the term 'health foods.' We should leave our food alone as much as possible. Health food conjures up fat diets and too many

"Our grandmothers knew all about natural foods," he says. "They didn't mess around with bleached white flour, preservatives or refined white sugar."

Phil considers the most destructive elements in the average American diet the "abundance of de-vitaminized, de-mineralized, over-prepared food products—bleached, white flour and all sugars, even brown sugar."

"Sugar is not a food," he explains. "It's pure carbohydrate, and it can be harmful to the body when too much is used."

The natural food substitute for any sugar is pure, organic, uncooked honey, which Phil considers a "natural sweet."

"Our entire temperament, our emotional stability can be affected by the diet we're on," Phil says.

"A radical overthrow in diet is bad and can damage the system. When you decide to stop eating meat, you need a period of transition."

"The body craves filters like meat, that require long digestive time. So when you first stop eating meat, you need to eat a lot of whole grains, beans and vegetables for a while."

Phil rarely eats any grains or legumes, and exists primarily on vegetables.

"I weigh 180 pounds," he says. "When I was eating meat, my average weight was 225 and sometimes I'd go as high as 245. The excess dropped off slowly in six to eight months as my body cleansed itself of its stored up poisons."

Phil believes in fasting, but cautions that it must be a very gradual thing, starting with giving up food for just one day a week.

"Sickness is a healing process," he believes.

"Animals fast when they are ill. There is a natural healing process inherent in all human beings. We just approach it wrong. We rush out to see what we can eat to make us well instead of not eating at all."

Aside from health considerations, Phil sees fasting as a turning away from the grosser physical vibrations and turning more to the pure spirit within oneself.

Outside us exists within. Man is the only living being who can be aware of his creator, of the God-in-Man," he says.

"But we waste this knowledge. We get caught up in this shadow plane we call 'life' and play ego games for our 70 or 80 years instead of seeking the higher things within ourselves."

Phil's mission in life goes beyond cooking soup and brown rice.

"I'm here to show people that natural foods are good. I used to think that corn flakes and bologna on white bread were really good foods. Then I learned differently."

"I will share with anybody all the knowledge I've been able to assimilate, but I can only help people who are ready to be helped. I'm not up on a soapbox."

To share his knowledge, Phil taught a class in organic vegetarian cooking at the UCLA Experimental College last summer. He was gratified by the tremendous response on the students' part.

"Fifty people showed up in a little night course—and we didn't even have a kitchen. It was just a lecture and discussion course."

Originally, Phil operated an organic food restaurant in Carmel Valley. Then, in 1969, he got an urge to go to India.

"We get finished with a desire by doing it," he says, and so he went to India. He returned in March of last year and began running the Earth Soul Food Restaurant behind the General Store in Carmel last August.

"Something kept pulling me back to this area," he says. "I'll stay as long as it is clear for me to stay here."

Judging from the response to his simple, delicious menus, the demand for his cooking is growing steadily.

"Our collective consciousness is becoming aware of natural foods," he says happily. "That's why there's this upswing in natural food co-ops and vegetarian restaurants."

If you think you're about ready to eat something that's good for you as well as tasting good, try some of Phil's goodies. And don't worry about the little black stringy things floating in the soup. They're seaweed—and smart people have been eating seaweed for thousands of years.

BY ALICE WOLFE

The Hermitage Shop is a respite from the day's hustle and bustle and a particularly appropriate place to stop by for the Easter week. In addition to displaying a fine collection of religious merchandise, it is also a meeting place for friends where they gather for a spot of conversation, a slice of fruitcake and cup of coffee.

The idea for the Hermitage Shop was the inspiration of Mrs. Eva Barabe, the mother of one of the hermits at Big Sur. With her daughter Lauretta, they stirred up enthusiasm to launch this project.

Jack Miller of Sunset Terrace, Inc. greatly facilitated the location of the shop. The Honorable Barney Lalolo, our Mayor, provided valuable advice and all the labor for the decorative lighting arrangements. Mrs. Sharon Stevens, with six lively children at home, found the time with her husband to mold and polish the redwood paneling and shelves, which Mr. Stevens installed.

The shop is entirely staffed by volunteers who donate their time and services. Included amongst the volunteers are Mrs. John Rowland of Salinas; Mr. Jefferson Scoville, Pebble Beach; Mrs. Gertrude Stoney, Carmel Valley; Mrs. Helen McGuire, Carmel; Mrs. Betty Haley, Carmel; Mr. Thomas Ronan, Monterey; Mr. Wilfred Daley, Hollister; Mrs. Louise Smith, Carmel; Mrs. Dorette Comings, Carmel; Mrs. Veronica Frey, Carmel; Mrs. Freida Hogan, Monterey; Mrs. Hamil, Monterey; Miss Katherine McGrath, Carmel; Miss Marilyn McLaughlin, Livermore; Mrs. Florence Neumann, Carmel; and Miss Sue Mattart, Salinas.

All are laborers for love and the joy of contributing their services to aid the solitary monks to continue their life of silent prayer and meditation, without the necessity to venture outside their cloistered retreat.

The Immaculate Heart Hermitage, the American home of the ancient order of Camaldolese Hermits, is located 26 miles south of Big Sur. One of the famous specialties of the Hermitage Shop is a three pound, beautifully decorated, deliciously moist, fruit cake made by the Camaldolese monks from an old recipe. This cake has been joyfully received all over the world and is in constant demand all year around. The monks also take weekly orders from the Hermitage Shop for their marvelous whole wheat and white bread.

Ecclesiastical art, paintings, stained glass windows and plaques, collages, sculptures of wood, terra cotta, brass and marble, as well as some of the finest reproductions of old masters to be found anywhere, decorate the shelves and walls of the Hermitage Shop. Most of the art is here on consignment, but also there are many gifts given by the artists to aid the monks.

While we were eating fruitcake and browsing, Simone de Virgile, of Pebble Beach and Paris, brought in a magnificent collage she had recently completed. Her picture depicts the monks at the Hermitage with extraordinary rich colors, a deep perspective, suggesting peace and restful vistas. It is a collage so cleverly assembled, it appears to be an oil painting.

Award winning wood sculptor Michael Anderson of Big Sur is showing his large carving, "Black Madonna of Big Sur". It is beautiful with an aura of great dignity.

There is stained glass sculpture by Brink-Ellas, Pebble Beach. Louise Pullen, wife of Rear Admiral Pullen of Pebble Beach, designs and creates leaded stained glass windows, plaques and decorative ornaments such as birds, flowers, fruit and religious symbols.

There is some handsome pottery in brilliant blues and greens, wheel thrown from Oregon clay, made right here in Carmel by the Carmelite nuns.

Amongst the fine collection of religious reproductions are El Greco's magnificent "The Virgin and Child" from the Widener collection, and "Michael The Archangel", all scarlet and gold, painted in 1405 by Theophanous. The original is in the Kremlin. The one of the UNESCO series of reproductions, selected from paintings all over the world.

Another UNESCO selection is "The Last Supper" from the Russian Museum of Art at Keiv.

The Hermitage Shop has a treasury of Gregorian chants and other choral music in their record collection. A library of religious and philosophical books, from the New American to the Power of Love by Fulton J. Sheen, is also provided.

Chinese painting requires time to appreciate

By GARY FRANTZ

A viewer of Chinese painting should be able to appreciate a scroll for an hour with sustained interest if he is worth his salt. The effect on the mind will be exhilaration and contentment, reflections of the painting, presuming it is of superior character. Fatigue and impatience do not enter.

"A beautiful painting is just like a beautiful girl...just like Shelley: a thing of beauty is a joy..."

The aesthetician is Thomas Chew, owner of the newly opened China Art Center on Dolores where Chew and his wife, Joan, maintain a singular collection of classical Chinese paintings. Part private and part public, the collection is displayed together with the store's jade, porcelain and metal ware. The tall walls of the vaulted building which used to be the Carmel Art Museum amply accommodate the unrolled scrolls. Fresh paintings are introduced from reserve stock each month. Among the works on display are authenticated Ming dynasty nature studies by Lin-Liang and Chang Ling. They are at least 500 years old.

The Chews brought their art works to Carmel from San Francisco where they operated a Chinese arts store on Grant Avenue in Chinatown. They were there 15 years and, previously, in Los Angeles for 21 years. They quit Los Angeles because of the smog and San Francisco because Mr. Chew wanted to retire. Recovering from an illness that postponed the store's opening several months, he minds the store for a short period each day. Joan handles the majority of the sales duties.

"We chose Carmel to retire because it's a small community and is quiet," says Mr. Chew.

The Chews, who met when they were students at the University of Southern California, were married in 1940. Their daughter, Frances, 26, recently left Carmel for Harvard where she teaches French. Her father calls her a dedicated scholar.

Mr. Chew would rather talk about his merchandise than himself.

"Who wants to hear about an old man?" he asks.

The media he is most interested in is painting. He became "really interested" about 15 years ago but recalls that even as a kid he "liked painting."

"I even paint a little, brush-style, as an amateur," he says. "I'm good with my hands. I also cut jade and opal."

When working with paint or stone, Mr. Chew says he toils oblivious to time well into the morning. Opals are especially "exciting."

"You see the line, the cut—just like Columbus discovering America," he explains. "All of a sudden you discover a certain color that's better than you expected. It's like having a business that does better than you expected, or like getting a full house in poker.

The gambling image is a holdover from 20 years ago when betting on horses commanded the man's attention. He gave up the passtime because of its impact on his nervous system.

The paintings are a considerably calmer activity. Mr. Chew states that the Chinese masters' appreciation for nature is matched in the West by few artists of his acquaintance, perhaps Whitman, Rousseau and Wordsworth, the latter more than Keats or Shelley.

One of the paintings hanging at the store is Lin-Liang's of two ducks near a waterbank. Mr. Chew points out that one of the ducks is female and seems to be demanding attention from the other, a male, who is withdrawn bird-manner the way a man might sit in front of a fire after a fine dinner.

"Maybe he's just made love to her," interprets Mr. Chew. "Now she wants him to get out and find some food or something."

The theme is repeated in the painting by a pair of small songbirds sitting on foliage above the ducks. The fire-gazing male, stolid on a lotus seed pod, gazes with eyes as disinterested as seeds toward his mate who is perched, entreating, on a bamboo twig. At the foot of the vigorous lotus stalk, a frond decomposes in the water.

"How do you think I figured that out?" asks Mr. Chew, referring to the birds' lifesong. "I studied the stroke, the expression. Do you see where the duck's feet are visible under the water?

"Sometimes I'll spend a few evenings for one picture, an hour for each piece. Otherwise I couldn't enjoy it.

It's like a man listening to the wind. You don't even know it's there until you take the time to sit down and listen to it."

BIG BIRTHDAY

It wasn't enough that Meredith St. John Huntington made her first communion this past weekend and had her grandparents and her great-grandmother visiting Carmel from the East for the occasion. Monday she celebrated her birthday with a swinging party in the Terrace Room of the Navy School's Officers Club with her entire River School second-grade class in attendance.

There were refreshments, games and dancing for the 22 little people during the afternoon. Parents coming to retrieve the guests after the festivities joined Meredith's parents, the Stuart Huntington's of Carmel, for coffee and sherry.

Adults at the after-party also met special guests including Mrs. Paula Boys, the children's second grade teacher; Mrs. Huntington's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Goley, from Woodlynne, N.J.; Meredith's great-grandmother, Mrs. John Nowrocki, from Lester, Pa.; Lt. Cdr. Paul F. Taylor, USN, Major Suprato of the Indonesian Navy, Lt. (j.g.) Y. Uluser of the Turkish Navy, his wife and son—the three officers all students at the Navy School.

Meredith's classmate-guests included Robbie Bradshaw, Jeff Brady, Brett Briggs, Lori Colletto, Matt Cropley, Heather Ferrill, Laurie Harney, Jill Keller, Lisa Lockwood, Bruce McCreary, Janna McMath, Michele Michaud, Dale Miller, Cornelia Read, Lisa Roberts, Lisa Smith, David Todaro, David Warner, Wendy Wickham and Scott Wilson. Also included were friends from La Mesa Village, Patty and Richard Todaro.

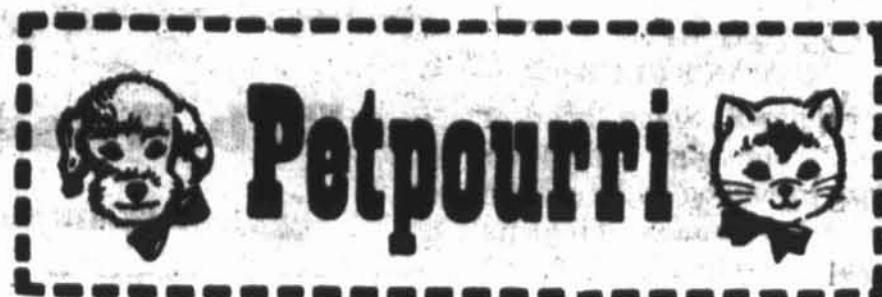

CHARLTON GUESTS

Recent guests of Mrs. Aimee Bealer Charlton were her daughter, Mrs. John Philip Broshard of Omaha, Nebraska, and her son, Lt. Col. John Bealer Charlton of Orlando, Florida.

LUNDEEN INVITED TO THE BAHAMAS

Gordon W. Lundeen, leading representative on the staff of Metropolitan Life Insurance Company's Monterey office, has been invited to participate in a four-day business conference with company officers and field representatives at the King's Inn, Freeport, Grand Bahama Island, during the week of May 2-6.

Last year, Lundeen, who lives at Spindrift Road, Carmel, placed more than $1,200,000 in personal life insurance, ranking him among the leaders of Metropolitan Life's 30,000 field representatives in the United States and Canada. It was the 16th time that his annual sales have passed the million mark.

By JUDITH A. EISNER

JUDGING FROM feedback we've received to reports of dog pack abuses, there is a sizeable proportion of the residents of this area who are interested in some form of compulsive restraint for dogs.

Although we don't believe in climbing on a soapbox most of the time, we do feel that the problem of uncontrolled dogs is potentially so dangerous that you ought to be kept informed of what the area's canine delinquents are up to.

Last week, a teacher at Carmelo School called to pass on his personal encounter with loose dogs.

This teacher likes to bicycle in to school as often as possible. On the day he met the dogs, he was cycling down Rancho San Carlos road. As he rides a racing bike, he had his feet strapped to the pedals; he also had a kite on his back, since he was teaching a lesson based on the Lions Club Kite Festival.

"At least four dogs" came after him, charging the bike. He was both afraid to stop and unable to jump off because of the foot straps. He ended up tumbling over onto his side, bike, kite and all.

Fortunately, he was not hurt and the bike only received minor damage. But he was furious!

He turned the tables on the dogs and chased them home where he received neither assistance nor apology from the people. A call to the sheriff—he was that angry—told him what others have been told—that unless he wanted to enter into civil suit for damages, he had no recourse through the law.

The six or eight dollars damage to his bike isn't as important to him as the principle of the matter. As he put it, "What's going to happen next time I go through there?"

THE SECOND incident concerns another dog who was chased, caught and terribly mauled by a dog or dogs on Panetta Road. Although she was not killed outright, she was so badly hurt and in such panic that the most humane thing to do was to put her to sleep.

She is at least the third deer to be killed, directly or indirectly, by dogs in this area within a month's time.

DOGS also broke into a private corral in Palo Colorado Canyon recently and attacked several sheep! One ewe was found disembowled but alive and was put down; another, though badly mauled, was nursed back to health.

That's all we heard about last week. We wonder what other "incidents" must have occurred that haven't reached our ears.

CONSUMER ADVOCATE Ralph Nader has recently promised to investigate misleading claims made by dog food manufacturers.

One of the things that you should be aware of in buying dogfood is that the advertising of these products is geared to your sense-appeal, not your dog's.

Unless you've been a dog or at least eaten dogfood, you really can't judge the palatability of the food. Therefore, the fact that something is advertised as being chock full of juicy moist "chunks" really isn't saying very much. All it does is make you think about chunks of beef.

Read the labels! Very often you'll find no mention of anything even faintly resembling beef or any meat. Those yummy "chunks" can be cereal or by-products (which can be hoof and horn) or latex rubber!

FAT CONTENT is also misleading advertising. Certain brands indicate that they don't contain "messy fats", and to an extent, this is true. The fat content in dried dogfoods, meal or kibble, has been reduced to retard spoilage and fat staining the sack.

The problem is that the manufacturers lead you to believe that dogs don't need fats in their diets. This can be harmful.

Most dogs don't get nearly enough fat because they are fed commercial feeds. A healthy dog can utilize as much as 20 percent of his total diet in fat—beef trimmings, oleo, bacon drippings, salad oil. A hard-working dog can profit from 30 percent fat in his diet. That means that one ounce out of every five ounces of food can be fat.

Generally speaking, we don't advocate stuffing your dog full of fat. But everyone should add extra fats to his pet's diet, in one of the above forms, unless a veterinarian has specifically forbidden such additions.

A teaspoon of bacon drippings a day for a small dog is adequate; a tablespoon or two for a large dog is about right.

EASTER always brings up the spectre of dead baby chicks and ducks and bunnies that have been misguidedly given as Easter Sunday toys.

Although we do not know of any dealers in such animals on the Peninsula, each year several stands spring up in north and south county areas peddling these babies by the roadside.

Please remember that these animals are not suitable presents for small children. They are frightened and fragile; and they cannot be humanely discarded the next day.

Stuff your Easter basket with real toys. No animal should ever be made into a plaything.

Bob Wood Reports...

ASSEMBLYMAN, 34th A.D.

The flu bug made the rounds in our family and he battled an even thousand percent. He never missed a soul, except possibly the family dog, at least she didn't complain to anyone. This same flu bug hit every member of our Sacramento office force and even laid low our District Secretary in Salinas. (I hope your family fared better percentage wise.)

One of the most perplexing dilemmas to face educators and law-makers alike - the great inequity in the funding of California's school districts through property taxes.

Spokesmen for school districts throughout the State say they are laying off teachers, curtailing programs and eliminating services if more State money is not made available. In many cases, the local property taxpayer has reached his absolute limit.

One of the proposals expected to come before us soon is a Statewide property tax to pay for all local public schools. If a State property tax were imposed, taxes now levied by each individual district would be eliminated. In its place school taxes would be paid to the State and the State would reimburse each school district on a per pupil basis.

The State Board of Education has long held that a Statewide property tax to support the schools would be in the best interests of all Californians.

Experts are quick to point out that local economic conditions, particularly a concentration of industry or lack of it, makes a great deal of difference in how a school is funded through taxes.

A district in one county, for instance, has an assessed valuation of more than $900,000 for each student and no financial crisis, while other districts have less than $10,000 assessed valuation for each student and are extremely hard pressed for money just to keep operating.

It would appear that because assessed valuation, tax rates and State aid vary for each district, children in some districts are receiving poorer educations than those in richer districts.

The end of the road has been reached by many of these poorer districts. State aid to schools has declined by 2 to 5 percent in the last three years, and districts have gone to voters for higher local taxes only to be turned down in about 50 percent of the cases.

What all this boils down to is that we as Legislators are faced with three basic choices on school district financing. We can do nothing, which would obviously accomplish nothing except dig us a deeper hole. We can adopt the administration's proposed budget - with about the same amount of money for schools as last year - and let the local districts attempt to seek voter approval for local tax hikes. Or we can pass legislation which will give public schools enough money to handle their needs for the next year.

Perhaps a meeting of the minds is within sight.

PARTY PLANS . . .

BY PHYLLIS JERVEY

When Mrs. Caroline Weaver first came to Carmel from her native Boston, she enjoyed canoeing on the lagoon, now part of our Bird Sanctuary where Carmel River and the ocean meet. Caroline still canoes there after twenty five years living in other places on this Peninsula. She had been waiting for just the right spot to continue her favorite avocation.

Having majored in botany and taken postgraduate work in landscape gardening at Wellesley, Caroline now lives in a charming one-floor home at the foot of Monte Verde in Carmel. The view is entrancing with purplish-green hills of the Stuyvesant Fish Palo Corona Ranch framing the near vista across the marshes. To the northeast is Jack's Peak and to the Southwest is Point Lobos.

What perception and know-how this capable Carmelite has! Every detail for a beautiful garden has been thought out in advance. Nothing daunts Caroline, which proves her Scotch-Welsh ancestry. Raining or not she is out of doors (her favorite place) transplanting and pruning.

What "Party Plans" didn't know about horticulture could be put into a thimble. Caroline had a ready and constructive answer to all our naive questions. It goes beyond having a "green thumb". Practice, patience and a genuine love for the soil is the answer.

To give you a brief resume of Caroline's Gardens, front and back, and not to sound like a seed catalogue, here are a few of this expert's plantation innovations. These are especially interesting right now when everyone is busy with his/her own own garden patch or patio plants.

There are blood and Valencia orange trees, lemons and tangerines. Also pomegranate, that exotic crimson "berry" the size of an orange; strawberry guava, nectarine. What an ambitious array. Apples and pears bloom separately.

Caroline takes this amazing variety in her stride. Fragrance is a fetish in the Weaver Gardens. Multi-colored giant sweet peas climb trellis after trellis. Mrs. W. made and painted these herself with a subtle maple-ice cream shade which rains and fog can not fade, explained practical Caroline. Other perfumed additions to this heavenly pot-pourri are lavender, broom, oleander, roses, fresas, rosemary, sweet alyssum, and "anything sweet".

We finally approached one of Carmel's best exponents of le jardin (Caroline includes French among her talents) about such a prosaic thing as "HOW do you nourish yourself?" We pictured wiry Caroline nipping nasturtium seeds ... most beneficial ... but here is the answer, to the point:

"As I do not find time away from garden projects long enough for daily cooking, I prepare enough to last several meals."

One of Mrs. W.'s standbys is:

Barley Broth with Scotch Stew

Have your meat man cut 3 lbs. lamb shanks into 1-inch rounds with plenty of marrow. Cover with water, adding 1 cup pearl barley. Simmer until barley is tender. Remove and save. You have flavored the lamb and broth with cut onion, celery, carrots. Cook, covered, until meat is tender. Caroline does not care for the usual Scotch addition of split peas, leeks, turnips, but she does approve of salt and pepper to taste, plus her home grown parsley, added at the last moment, well snipped.

The broth is what the French call a bouilli. Drained, it is served, steaming hot, before the equivalent of "petite marmite", or the Latin-American version of "cocido" consisting of meats, vegetables. Time-saver, filler-up, vitamins, economy in a package deal. The lamb is taken off bones, with marrow.

In Caroline's case, barley is the mainstay. Half goes into the broth, the other half into the stew.

In Scotland, too, the meat used for making the broth is served separately with a sauce consisting of a little hot broth, mixed with prepared mustard, vinegar, or a mixture of pickled cucumbers and nasturtiums warmed in butter. The bouilli is garnished with diced cooked carrots and strewn with chopped parsley. Look out stomach, here it comes!

Caroline's Plum Preserve

Wash very tart fresh plums, softened to a stage of not being over-ripe. Cover with only enough water so scorching will not occur. The amounts are two lbs. plums with one peeled orange, seeded, plus the juice of half a lemon. Cut orange into small pieces.

Cook gently, stirring all the while. The plums will start giving juice so do not add more water unless necessary. The skins will meld into the pulp, making a jellied melange after you have added sugar to taste. To test when the moment of truth has arrived, use a "china saucer, put a tiny amount on this; see if tip of spoon will make a small space. If this stays separate, it is all right, if not, cook a little longer." (That is Caroline's great grandmother's way, back in Glasgow.)

Chopped black or regular walnuts are added at the last moment. Of course, in this unique process, as soon as the plum pits are loosened, remove them with a slotted spoon. Cool before putting into sterilized jars and cover with paraffin.

For a quick snack, inventive Caroline just opens a can of solid pack tomatoes, always kept chilled, and combines these with her favorite curly endive. What could be more expedient?

We admire self sufficiency this Carmel of ours where about 500 widows live alone.

"How do you feel about loneliness?" we asked bluntly.

"ALONE? Why I have my white huskie ... a Kees-Samoyed, descendant from the earliest known domesticated dog on this continent. These still exist in all arctic areas on our continent. See how strong and agile she is!"

This we believed as we looked up, for there on the roof was the household protector.

"Will she jump?" timidly asked your interviewer.

"She has too much sense for that" came the answer.

Gay's Diary:

Brief impressions of a corner of Ireland

Mrs. G.Y. Kuster interrupted her little theater activities in Carmel years ago to travel through various parts of the world. Reports on her adventures came back to Pine Cone readers under the heading, "Gay's Diary."

Mrs. Kuster, the widow of the late Edward Kuster, who ran the Golden Bough, last year began another journey. She supplied reports to long-time Carmel friend, Mrs. Elna Douglas-Grundy, who thought a revival of "Gay's Diary" would be timely.

The series begins in Ireland and wends its way for several weeks through the British Isles.

By G.Y. KUSTER

Ten days of Ireland, windy, wet and occasionally sun-splashed, have left me with a luminous greenness in my mind's-eye; a mantle of hills upon hills furred with patches of dark forests and etched with curling threads of roads. Some, which dip down into tiny villages, pass sign posts that I have been forever trying to photograph, literally and mentally, as we splattered past them in a friend's small car: Cushendall and Carlough, Ballymena, Portrush, Ballintoy and Port Bradden. In the last, a thatcher, perched precariously atop his completed roof, was sewing in large (raffia?) stitches a neat design along the length just below the crest.

Toward sundown we found a lonely shore road leading, they say, to Marconi's cottage. Here curlews stood beside their mirrored reflections, as though guarding them, on the shining patches of wet sand, and a single pearly heron silhouetted itself against ebony rocks. Across the curving road a gorse steep rose abruptly, and black-nosed sheep looked down upon us with their grave, censorious gaze, momentarily immobile before they dashed upward in flight.

After each outing...back to Ballycastle. And, on the way, from the chimneys of farm houses peat smoke rose and filled the evening air. My friend stopped at a shop for bread, and when at last the busy little assistant came to us, apologetic and breathless, she asked, "Are ye gettin'?" Grace said no, and told her what we needed. And when Grace paid her she flew off and returned with the change, saying, "Here y'are now." We gave the girl a message for her father, after which we left, and the tune of her, "I'll tell him, so I will," sang in my ears.

There are many Ballys in County Antrim, and these, once upon a time, were rolled into one sentence producing the admonition, "If you weren't so Ballymena you'd have some Ballymoney to buy a Ballycastle."

In a few days I'll be comparing Wales with the wet greenness of this little island.

After Ireland came Cheshire. High above the Sands of Dee, my cousin's house backs against a gorse and heathered hill which now is protected by England's National Trust, so none can build upon it. My cousin, Sylvia, is a botanist, a zoologist and biologist. Her modesty is a screen, but I know she won plaudits from American universities, after Cambridge in England. Her wild garden is something of a joy. And, even in October, the rhododendrons towered like glowing trees over small plants that hug or cover Cheshire's purplish rocks, green lichen even as the Carmel Valley oaks.

Looking down over the red brick town of West Kirby, far below this hill, blue wood-smoke from warm chimneys seems to weave a shawl over it in the twilight, and one hears the cries of sea-birds following the nightly crowd of homing fishing boats on the River Dee...otherwise there is stillness.

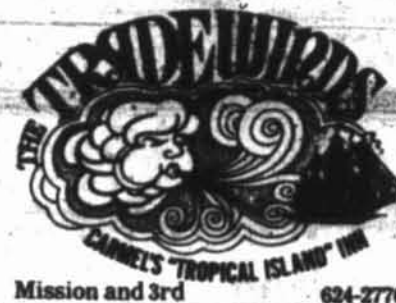

Trips into Wales, almost daily, to show me its charms were a welcome excuse, my cousin insisted, to drive there. And, oh, the autumn countryside! I do not know what charmed me most, whether it was the bracken-robed hills, red-brown as a fox's coat in sunlight but crimsoning into raisin-purple toward evening, or the billberry and blackberry hedges that divided the planted fields and embroidered the edges of little ribbon roads leading into farmyards, or, perhaps the farms themselves...grey stone buildings, or chalk white, but all with stone or slate roofs...or whether it was, after all, the soft Welsh speech, a Celtic incomprehensible but sheer music, that so enchanted me day after day. But I often day-dream of our picnic by a gently chatting stream in the Hirnant valley. Here I made friends with rowan trees, for the first time, and gin berry bushes. And I pass through Denbigh and Mold once more in order to climb Mole Arthur, breathless and plodding through the long grasses of its north flank, up and up to its windy top, there to look over half of Wales. I dream my way past Conway to Bettys-y-Coed (Betty's in the Wood), Capel Curig and Pen-y-Gibryd under Mount Snowden, with rain in the offing, as it often is.

I come out of my reverie to hear the clipped English of the BBC describing incredible atrocities in country after country, over the whole of this inherently wondrous world—perhaps approaching destruction, and certainly steeped in suffering—all for a mess of pottage, or, as someone said more simply, "...all for the want of a horseshoe nail."

The music corner

BY IRVING W. GREENBERG, Ph.D.

NANCY NESS BOWMAN and her Monterey Peninsula Opera Workshop gave a song recital Wednesday afternoon at All Saints Church in Carmel devoted to both lieder and selections from the opera.

The lieder recital included works by Dvorak, Mendelssohn, J. Strauss, Faure and Malotte, while the selections from the opera featured arias from Puccini, Boito, Mozart, Mascagni and Verdi. Foremost, for her beautiful tone quality as well as for her impressive stage presence, was Jean Canada, the mezzo very well known to Peninsula audiences. Among others that furnished lovely arias, either in solo or in duet, were Jane Strach, soprano, and Robert Armistead, bass.

LAST WEEK, the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra under Seiji Ozawa gave an interesting and beautiful concert. The Bach-Stokowski Toccata and Fugue in D minor with a deeply harmonious and enlivened performance, with the sweet figuration and total understatement. The Mozart Serenade in G, K. 230 (Mozart) is a work in three movements, and, at times, appeared to be almost a single piece (by the concertmaster) with orchestral accompaniment. It, too, shared a magnificence brought out by the lyrical approach by Mr. Ozawa.

In the Schoenberg Piano Concerto, Mr. Ozawa had Peter Serkin as soloist. The playing by Mr. Serkin was in harmonious relationship to the twelve tone system of Schoenberg and in complete rapport with the orchestra. The Beethoven Fantasia for Piano, Orchestra, and Chorus, Op. 80, enlisted, in addition to Mr. Serkin, the San Jose State College Choir in a performance of virility and grandeur.

ON SUNDAY AFTERNOON, April 4, Maestro Haymo Tauber conducted the Monterey Peninsula Choral Society and the Monterey County Symphony Chamber Orchestra in a performance of George Frederick Handel's great and towering masterpiece, the Messiah, at the Naval Postgraduate School (King Hall) in Monterey. The soloists on this occasion were Laura Jean Hodges, soprano; Glenna De Weese, contralto; James Hull, tenor; and Robert Armistead, bass.

From the very beginning, it was quite evident that the atmosphere of religious dedication that pervaded this performance was induced by the Easter Season. Indeed, at times, it seemed that because of this ambience, a plaintive tone ran throughout, rather than the joyful annunciation that was intended by the composer to dominate.

Although the strings were somewhat thin in weight, still they played beautifully and with a great deal of introspection. A greater concentration in the bass section would have given a deeper significance. The Choral Society was best in those sections requiring a heavier volume of sound for effective balance with the orchestral tone and with the voices of the soloists.

As far as the soloists themselves were concerned, outstanding was the soprano, Laura Jean Hodges. Her purity of tone, her enunciation and her expressive utterances was demonstrated in all her accompanied and unaccompanied recitatives, as well as in her solo arias. Her tessitura, although not very large, was still broad enough to fulfill the demands made on her by the music.

Robert Armistead, the bass, performed well enough, but with no great enthusiasm. Diane Rabinovitch furnished a continuo on the organ. Maestro Haymo Tauber conducted crisply, and with a great deal of involvement in the score.

Recommended Recordings of this Work:

There are many beautiful recordings of this work, each with its own interpretation, but the following two seem to the writer to be just outstanding.

The Royal Liverpool Phil. Orch. with the Huddersfield Chorus and Soloists under Malcolm Sargent on Seraphim S-6056.

LOW BID for the new Carmel Sanitary District sewage treatment plant - or water pollution control plant, in updated terminology - was $2,502,000, accepted by the district board this week. Architects show the plant layout: incoming sewage piped across river to aerators. To left, sedimentation tanks and, far left, outfall pumping station. To right, heating control building, site of future digester, and sludge drying beds. (Tanks at lower left and lower right will not be included in first contract.)

Carmel Sanitary District awards new treatment plant project to Oakland company

Low bid was accepted Tuesday night for construction of Carmel's $2½ million secondary sewage treatment plant.

The Carmel Sanitary District board of directors meeting at the district's Carmel Rancho office awarded the job to Stolte Inc. of Oakland.

Stolte's bid of $2,502,321.50 was the lowest among 11 opened March 9 this year. The next lowest was $2,562,301.90.

After the bids were opened by the board last month, they were sent for inspection to state and federal sanitary officials. Approval from the higher levels arrived Friday.

The board also announced an increase in federal grants for construction of the plant and its outfall line.

Federal money contributed to plant construction increased from the previous pledge of $822,000 to $1,216,250 - an increase of $394,250. The outfall grant increased $107,800 from $161,700 to $269,500.

Notice of the increase was received this week.

The increase results from state voters' approval in November of the Clean Water Act. The act provides for increased federal participation in sewage treatment projects from 30 to 50 percent, on the condition that the state foot 25 percent of the bill. The federal government then adds another 5 percent after the state makes its contribution to make the total outside participation 80 percent.

Board Chairman Harold C. Arnot said the money will be supplied as the project progresses.

"You do the work, tell them how much you've spent, then they make payments - so you're always three or 4 months behind," he said.

On another matter, the district's attorney, Shelburn Robison, of Carmel, confirmed that April 15 is the new court date for determination of a restraining order issued on the new plant's outfall line.

The original date, April 2, was inconvenient for another district lawyer, James Morton of San Mateo.

The order was issued by Monterey County Superior Court at the behest of Point Lobos resident and Monterey attorney, Tom Hudson, who claims the extended line will ruin his property.

Asked about rumors that the board and Hudson had patched up their differences since the order was issued last month, Arnot laughed and said, "I bought his (Hudson's) lunch but we're still going to court."

"At least we're on speaking terms," he added. "I think if we can get over this one hurdle we can resolve our differences."

The "hurdle" is Hudson's claim that effluent from the outfall will pollute Carmel Bay, said Arnot.

There is no factual basis for Hudson's charge, Arnot said.

In a final matter of business, the board acknowledged the retirement of H.C. Hilbert of Carmel, board secretary for nine years.

LINES FROM LOIS

*"There was a child
went forth every day,*

And the first object he looked upon, that object he became,

And that object became part of him for the day or a certain part of the day,

Or for many years, or stretching cycles of years.

*The early lilacs became part of this child,
And grass, and red and white morning glories, and white and red clover, and the song of the phoebe bird...*

And the water plants with their graceful flat heads...

And the apple trees cover'd with blossoms and the fruit afterward, and wood-berries, and the commonest weeds by the road...

All the changes of city and country wherever he went...

These became part of that child who went forth every day."

Looking at some of our family homes this week in this loveliest of all lands in the springtime of the year, we couldn't help recalling these lines of Walt Whitman's, and pondering how much more than just a house some of our listings offer to that child who goes forth every day.

IN RANCHO CANADA, in a virtual park, we have a real family world, where nature would be as much a part of a child's life as his own child-planned room, and where there is room for a garden of his own, and tree houses, and pets, and where even his bicycle has a special "garage". FOR FAMILIES WHO ENJOY SWIMMING, we have 3 most interesting properties to see right now - two on the tops of hills overlooking the Valley, and one on the meadow floor. All three, incidentally, are priced at $85,000. We even have a family treasure for only $59,500 with a whole canyon of oak trees to go with it. And for those who appreciate the rare delight to a child of walking down a country lane to school, we have a 15 acre paradise in the Corral de Tierra sunshine which would guarantee memories which would forever be a wonderful part of your child's life.

IF YOU AREN'T QUITE READY TO MOVE HERE PERMANENTLY, why not acquire a little house right in downtown Carmel, where the beach can be walked to and on, and the Valley reached in five minutes, and the Sur Coast easily accessible. We have six houses right now under $50,000, all of which have that elusive "Carmel charm".

ANYWAY, why not stop in and have a cup of coffee with us and talk about real estate with your children in mind. If we don't have just what you want, or if you aren't quite ready, at least we can chat about possibilities.

IT'S EASTER TIME, and we'd like to wish for you "some new love of lovely things, and some new forgetfulness of the teasing things, and some higher pride in the praising things, and some sweeter peace from the hurrying things, and some closer fence from the worrying things." If John Ruskin has known Carmel, he would have dedicated these remarks to this most incomparable of all ways of life. Sincerely,

Lois Renk

the mayor's report

By BARNEY LAIOLO

Last Wednesday night's meeting in the Chamber of the Planning Commission at Salinas which was attended by Councilmen Falge, Anderson, Whittlesey and yours truly, proved conclusively the interest of the citizens of the area. Several concerns and points of view were expressed. Time will tell how much interest there is and how much people are willing to do to preserve the beauty of the area. A combined interest on the part of the public who are willing to work and pay for the purchase of this land will prove how much the public is anxious to keep our area in its natural state. Time will tell.

Just to clarify some misinformation that has been circulating regarding the Easter Sunday closing of a part of Ocean Ave. please take note that this function is purely an experiment to see if the public generally likes the idea and also to check on traffic patterns and the use of parking at Sunset and the Fenton Plaza. Remember that San Carlos Street will be a through street and only Dolores and Lincoln will be closed off to parking. There will be artists working with paints, musicians playing at different spots and just a general open feeling of people enjoying themselves. This is not being done with the idea of shutting off any particular business.

School elections are getting closer. It is your right to vote for whichever candidate might be your choice. As I mentioned earlier - study the qualifications and note the candidate of your choice - but be sure to vote.

Ocean Avenue 'mall' Easter Sunday

The atmosphere for Sunday's city Easter festivities on Ocean Avenue—which is closed to traffic for the day—will be "low-key" according to organizer, Frank Riley, Sunset Center manager.

At a special meeting a couple of weeks ago, the city fathers voted to close Ocean Ave. to vehicular traffic between San Carlos and Lincoln, a two-block stretch.

AUTOGRAPH PARTY

Jack Curtis, Big Sur author, will autograph copies of his new novel, "Banjo," at the Thunderbird Book Store this Saturday from 6 to 8 p.m.

The novel is set in Kansas during the prohibition era and tells the story of a naive farm boy who becomes involved with bootleggers and a beautiful blues singer.

Mr. Curtis is also the author of "The Kloochman" and several volumes of poetry.

North-south traffic would be prohibited only along Dolores. Normal traffic patterns apply for both San Carlos and Lincoln, except that many more cars than usual will be travelling on those streets.

Richard Brace's music group has been lined up to stroll the avenue playing unamplified guitar and organ music with voice accompaniment.

Two artists will also display their talents, Pat Carey at a stand between Dolores and Lincoln and George Payne between San Carlos and Dolores. There will be no solicitation of work in keeping with the day's un-commercial character.

The day would not be complete, of course, without an Easter bunny, and one is being provided by the Fire Department in conjunction with the Carmel Youth Center. Bunny will stroll up and down the avenue.

Through traffic will flow on San Carlos and parking will be provided at Sunset Center between 1-5 p.m.

Several of the center's major attractions, including the Brett Weston photograph exhibit at Friends of Photography and The Carmel High School Easter Parade of Art will be open to the public.

Although there has been resistance to the festivities by some members of the business community on the grounds that Carmel will become a "Coney Island" for the day, both Riley and Mayor Barney Laiolo affirm that the atmosphere will be casual—"just a general open feeling of people enjoying themselves," says the mayor.

"This is not being done with the idea of shutting off any particular business," he adds.

According to Laiolo, the city considers the day an experiment to obtain reactions both to the mall concept and to the changed traffic flow.
